History

Exact Editions is an integrated content management platform for magazine publishers. It was launched in 2005 by Adam Hodgkin, Daryl Rayner and Tim Bruce. The company has always been based in London and now has offices in Hatton Garden.

Exact Editions has always operated on the principle that magazines have valuable archives and that subscribers should, where possible, have full access to the riches that they contain. The Exact Editions platform is unusual in providing full access to all available issues to all subscribers. The platform is also unusual in being equally able to deliver subscriptions to individuals and efficiently to institutions, especially libraries, through IP-based networks.

Founders

Daryl Rayner

Daryl Rayner started her career in STM publishing, working for Nature Publishing Group, Current Science Group and Elsevier before co-founding Exact Editions in 2005. She is now the Managing Director and lives in London.

Adam Hodgkin

Adam Hodgkin began his career as a philosophy editor with Oxford University Press; since then, he has co-founded and worked for three companies: Cherwell Scientific Publishing, xrefer, and Exact Editions. He is still active in publishing as the Chairman of Exact Editions and keeps a philosophical cast of mind.
